

Dear Raymond, Brown

6/23/95

The books are on the way. and thanks for your letter and the little tip.

I did not send them insured because that would have cost almost a thord of what the books cost. We have not yet had any complaints about any books sent abroad.

In the butchery of Case Open there were two different versions of what was eliminated from it and both mislead. I do not envision that either of the institutions where the full text will be deposited will be in a position to provide ^{the} copies. They will have copies for examination. And providing copies is impossible for me.

It has not yet been fully retyped. The last page is # 752.

But I do have some plans.

I've located a student who is a computer whiz. When she can I'll be asking her to continue with the retyping. She says she can also transfer what is on the disk of the complete ms to the disk on which another book I'm writing will be. It is my hope to add what was butchered out onto the disk of the new book and to use it as part of that book.

Which would then require a publisher, of course.

And for those books that are not either sycophantic or nutty the publishers are not standing in line waiting.

If this new book is ever published The Last Hurrah will know about it.

Thanks and best wishes,

Harold
